Hey Kenny,

FYI: Here's a statement we put together today in reference to the case that you're reporting on.

As has been reported today in the media, Youngstown State University in September 2016 received reports of two sexual assaults on campus. The accusations were appropriately reviewed as per the university's investigative and student conduct processes, resulting in the expulsion of one student and the suspension of two others.

Students who are suspended from the university after being found in violation of the Code of Student Conduct are eligible for re-admission. The university is reviewing the need to develop additional processes to ensure that the campus activities of students re-admitted to the university are appropriate given the nature of their Code violation.

Every student disciplinary case is different, and rarely does a case fit into a one-size-fits-all solution. Moving forward, we are committed to ensuring a greater awareness and scrutiny of these particular kinds of situations.
